ABSTRACT

Owing to the familiar customs, languages, and cultures, the Mainland market is rather easier to become foreign direct investment market for Taiwanese firms. When China opened up its market at first, Taiwanese firms used several ways to enter the Mainland market to invest. China has loosened its restrictions little by little, therefore Taiwanese firms not only can set wholly owned subsidiaries, but also sell limited products domestically. What entry strategy will be chosen is the main topic of the research. The research takes small businesses to investigate the factors affecting entry modes. The research hopes to understand the effects of marketing operation types, organizational competence, and host country institution on entry modes through questionnaire.
