This paper demonstrates how to use the modularized programming structure to develop an embedded digital controller for motor drives. The control programs are constructed by modular program sets, and integrated within the Matlab/Simulink operational interface. We have shown that this approach is effective in building programs used to operate motors under torque, velocity, or position mode.

Keywords: Modularized programming structure; Digital controller.